SELEX GALILEO Opens New Electronic Warfare Operational Support Facility in Lincoln

SELEX GALILEO is pleased to announce the opening of its new Electronic Warfare Operational Support (EWOS) facility in Lincoln, UK. The new site is dedicated to the delivery of EWOS capability and products.

Located at Alpha Court, on the western outskirts of Lincoln, the 1100 square metre facility, which includes a 200 square metre Radio Frequency screened laboratory, is strategically sited to enable SELEX GALILEO to provide enhanced Electronic Warfare (EW) support to local RAF operational units and to the UK Air Warfare and Defence EW Centres.

The new EWOS facility will enable SELEX GALILEO to build on its expertise in the support of hardware systems and software tools and will benefit from the expertise of highly skilled employees with strong military EW and EWOS backgrounds. The facility will employ up to 40 specialists.

Mike Brown, Director of Fixed Wing and Operational Support at SELEX GALILEO, says "Our new Lincoln facility demonstrates the Company's commitment to providing through-life capability support to our customers through considerable investment in a secure environment for customer training and mission data file production, test and validation."

Notes to Editors:

Electronic Warfare Operational Support (EWOS) is the integrated mission support to military forces for Electronic Warfare (EW). This includes the provision of EW data, information, intelligence, doctrine, training, trials analysis, and tactics and countermeasures advice.
